

From 1901 to 1917 the Lozier Motor Company made fine racing and passenger automobiles. This is a 1909 Meadowbrook Raceabout, owned by Don Collee of Los Angeles. The chaste, squared-off radiator, good-looking without flamboyance, typified the design. Note the acetylene gas generator mounted on the left running-board, the angled windshield with its supporting post, the round gasoline tank. Lozier had a distinguished racing history. In 1911, Teddy Tetzlaff, driving a 16-horsepower Lozier in a 100-mile match race against a 90-horse Fiat, Ralph de Palma up, won by a six-mile margin and an average speed, on a one-mile track, of 80.5 m.p.h., setting world records in the process.
